Without Offerings of Big-Souled New York Children Must Suffer.

TRIBUNE FUND IS BESIEGED BY BABIES

So Many Need Cool Outings from Swettering City, and Poverty Pinches Thousands.

A representative of one of the lower A representative of one of the lower West Side social settlements came to the office of The Tribune Fresh Air Fund on Saturday of last week in great sgitation to ask, "When are you going to put some of our children in your country parties?"

Before an answer could be given she continued, "Already you have sent invitations for large numbers to all the ather organizations in our netghborhood, but you've allowed us none."

This was probably true. The early part of this week the Tribune Fund will send away about 1,300 boys and girls for country vacations. Doubtless considerable numbers of these are to be taken from the organizations referred to by from the organizations referred to by the dissatisfied worker. What she failed to realize was that, with almost 150 organizations asking for places for more than 12,000 children, not all ould be satisfied at the beginning of

This same representative had an-This same representative had another question to ask, one which is asked repeatedly every year, but particularly in the first weeks of the senson: "How many children will you send away for us this summer?"

The question brings to light the most difficult problem the Fund is called upon to solve at the beginning of each year, active work—how many chil-difficult problem the Fund is called upon to solve at the beginning of each season's active work—how many children shall plans be laid for?

The Fresh Air work is supported by voluntary contributions. The number of outings that can be provided is entirely governed by the money contributed. The problem therefore resolves itself into the question, "How much money is the public going to contribute to the Fund in 1914?"

Obviously this is a question hard to answer. In the last five years the receipts of the Fund have averaged about $45,000 a year. In that period, however, the amount received in a single year has varied from $43,000 to $52,000. The number of children who received outings each year has, of course, varied in about the same ratio.

$50,000 Needed for All.

At the present date $6,719 97 has been received toward the expenses of this summer. To send away all of the children now on the Fund's lists will require at least $50,000; and, without doubt, the number of youngsters for whom outings will be asked will be greatly increased as the days go by.

How much of the $50,000 will the friends of the boys and girls of the friends of the boys and girls of the friends of the boys and girls of the depression which prevails in the dusiness world. Already old friends of the Fund and its work have said regretfully, "Business conditions make it impossible for us to help this season."

But this has been a targible head has done so.

There is still another side of the problem. For several years past a number of the social settlements and number of the social settlements and number of the social settlements and similar organizations of the city have maintained small Fresh Air camps to which were sent some of the children that were known to need outings.

Some of these camps are to be continued this year. On the other hand, several of these organizations have reported that they shall have to give up prorted that they shall have to give up in the san Francisco exposition, and the annual cruise, usually made to European waters, will in 1915 be made through the Panama Canal to the Past of the Coast.

These figures are based on the findings of the National Conservation Commission, which puts the average value of a baby at $2,900. This estimate is obtained by subtracting the cost of bringing up a baby from the average earnings of the adult.

On this basis New York City lost $40,000,000 in 1913 through infant mortality. It spent only $1,000,000 to geep the babies alive. Of this amount only $200,000 was contributed by the city government, $800,000 being private charity.
